Is Daylight Saving Time a Holiday? Or is it Daylight Savings Time?

Americans think Daylight Saving Time ends before Halloween, and that's simply not so. Over the years, Daylight Saving Time has shifted from before Halloween to the first Sunday in November. In 2015, it falls on November 1. Daylight Saving Time isn't technically a holiday, but some people consider it one because it's the one day per year they get an extra hour of sleep! If that's not confusing enough, people worldwide have changed this man-made "holiday" into "Daylight Savings Time" when the actual term is "Daylight Saving Time."

Maintenance Corner

Now that fall is here, it's getting colder at night. Maintenance wants to remind residents to please switch your thermostats from "cool" to "heat". If it is not switched, to "heat," then turning up your thermostat won't produce hot air. Always remember, if you experience an emergency after hours, you can always contact our emergency services staff at (215) 546-2525.
